EXACT REPLICA

Army Grenade

(AS USED IN HAND COMBAT)

Yes, this is your chance to be the first in your neighborhood to have this realistic "weapon". It's an exact replica of the one used by the army and our marines in fierce hand-to-hand combat, to wipe out machine-gun nests, demolish trenches, "get" concealed snipers, defend against massed attack.

Just cock the firing mechanism, load the cap and you're ready! Imagine—you're a marine creeping up on that machine-gun nest, your grenade is in your hand. You creep close, low. Now you're in range, you pull the safety pin with your teeth and throw! Bull's eye, right into the nest. Blast! The machine gun flies out broken. Now silence. Your buddies cheer—the advance starts up again!

This grenade explodes 4 seconds after pulling pin as it strikes ground. Can't break. Heavy gauge steel firing mechanism. Uses standard caps. Can be exploded over and over. Comes complete with throwing instructions. (Parents: This toy grenade is completely harmless!) Clip ad, write your name and address clearly in margin and send it with $1.00 plus 25¢ shipping charge—cash, check or money order to:

RECORDEREX'S REVOLT

Elsa agreed to pick me up with the car at four. I had given her a special security pass so that she wouldn't have to be bothered at the control booth. Captain Edison had met her when I took her to the charity dance at the club so no time would be wasted. The program called for a drive along the shore road — then supper at Henry's and dancing.

I was thinking that sooner or later I would ask her to be my wife. Then in walked Paul Lager.

Actually what was I? Nothing but a nursemaid to an automatic thinking machine that had cost almost a billion dollars to develop and build; the brain child of the late Professor John Farrell. It would have taken months for the best brains in the country to go over the budget. Yet, RECORDEREX would do it in half an hour and without a single mistake.

"We close at four this afternoon," I told Paul. "Dr. Mitchell is coming in with his staff. They want to use the low feed calculators for some research they are doing at State University. Captain Edison will be in charge at that time."

I then arose from my desk and walked ahead of my friend. We were heading for the control room when suddenly I saw Dr. Philip Corwin headed for me in the corridor. And the man who always walked so slow was actually running.

"Dr. Jennings," he called. "Something is wrong with the RECORDEREX. The machine is beginning to vibrate. What shall we do?"

The three of us hurried to the small balcony on the second floor. It gave me a complete and clear view of the machine. We could feel the vibrations. Dave Harman came up to me. His face was as white as snow.

"I can't understand it," he pleaded. "I started the tape speed at 7 inches per second. The feeder is still working. What do you think went wrong?"

"Maybe the budget was too high," I replied in a feeble attempt to joke. "I'll throw the detacher switch. That should bring our RECORDEREX to a complete stop."

I touched button 8A which then set the actuator working. In three minutes the entire machine should stop, but it didn't! Then I threw the emergency switch. Still no result. Definitely something was wrong. The machine had to have power to work. So I went to the phone and dialed the power room.

"Hello, Jameson. This is Dr. Jennings speaking. Stop the two generators that feed power to RECORDEREX. Something is wrong and we want to check the set-up."

"Will do in five seconds," he replied.

Five seconds passed. Then five minutes. Nothing happened. I called back on the phone and ordered Frank Jameson, our top power engineer to report to me at once on the balcony. When he came you could see the scared look on his face.

"We unhitched the power couplings," he told me. "Not a bit of juice is being fed to the machine. I even set the lead safety plates in front of our feed distributor."

It couldn't be, but it was taking place right in front of us. The machine was functioning without any juice being fed to it. And the vibrations were increasing.

"Something is haywire," said Dave Harman. "Suppose I try to tear out the tape. That ought to stop everything."

This was an emergency and I had full power to act. There was a master tape of the budget in Washington. We could use that one. This tape would have to have a section or two destroyed. We all went downstairs with Dave. He opened a small metal door. All he had to do was to rip out a section of tape, or try to lift the entire reel from the spindle. He inserted his right hand then he screamed in agony.

"It's got me!"

We rushed over and grabbed hold of him. Finally we released his hand. He was a case for first aid. By this time Captain Edison had joined us. He and his safety patrol had begun to feel the vibrations. They were increasing in intensity.

"The entire machine and everything around it could collapse," warned Dr. Philip Corwin. "What could have gone wrong?"

"The machine tried to drag me in," half sobbed Dave as he went for first aid. "I think it has gone crazy."

My eye caught the little red bulb that had started to flash on the danger indicator. Where was the source of power? Paul Lager had a suggestion to make.

"Could it be an induced current?"

While that was a possibility it didn't help us at the given moment. The large indicator dials were turning around as though they were mad. Another ten minutes and it looked as if they would fall off the machine. Then the phone rang. Dr. Mitchell had arrived ahead of his staff. Could I see him? Of course! When he came in I quickly told him the situation.

"Your source of energy is within the machine itself," he concluded. "What set-up do you have for the emergency running of this machine?"

Quickly I sent for the diagrams we hadn't used during the past three years. There was a faint recollection that we had a small atomic pile inside the RECORDEREX. We checked over the diagrams. Sure enough, we found such a condition did exist.

"I am going inside the machine. I will try to disconnect the brain-feeder. All power must go through that unit," was what I told the men. "Get me some tools."

The vibrations were steadily increasing. Some of the electric bulbs in the ceiling were starting to crack and fall apart. The time had come to give the danger alarm. I ordered Captain Edison to sound the siren. Clear the buildings and the area of all our personnel in a hurry.

"But what about you?" he demanded.

"I must stop RECORDEREX! That's all I know."

I climbed a ladder after the needed tools had been put inside a heavy leather apron which I wore. Sure, I was beginning to feel terribly frightened. Either I was dizzy or I imagined that the entire machine had started to sway. I opened a large trap door. This was the way we sent in our mechanics when we had to make replacements of damaged or worn-out parts. I started to walk and could faintly see the inside of RECORDEREX. Suddenly two large bars picked me up and actually threw me out! Fortunately I was able to grab hold of the ladder. Otherwise I might have landed head first on the concrete floor below.

I need an inspiration! Something to be done to save the machine and the entire laboratory. Then I got it! Just a million in one chance. But it might work! Quickly I scrambled down the ladder and headed for the timer that worked the tape recorder. It was a desperate thing to do. I shaved the time to the highest speed. One we never used. It would feed the tape through not at 7 inches per second but at 200 inches per second!

The noise became deafening. As though everything was about to go up like a volcano blowing its lid. And then there was quiet. No noise! No vibrations!

"You did it," shouted Dr. Mitchell. Man against the Machine! And man won!"

We removed the tape and then ran a trial tape through RECORDEREX. Everything worked perfectly smoothly. Then Captain Edison came up to me. He handed me a tape.

"Somewhere there was a mix-up. Here is the tape from Washington. The one with the new budget proposal. But what was on the tape that Dave fed into the machine?"

The all-clear signal and safety blast had been sounded. So everyone returned. We found Dave. His hand was bandaged. I held up the reel of tape and gave him an order.

"Into my office. We have something to clear up."

We set up a small portable tape recorder on my desk. Then inserted this reel and we played it. Terrible, horrible, sickening sounds came from the speaker. We were all horrified — all except Dave. In spite of the near tragedy that had almost taken place, Dave laughed. It broke the tension.

"All my fault," he pleaded. "I had that reel in my brief case. Took it out. I must have been a bit mixed up and inserted that reel instead of the correct one. Believe me, if I were RECORDEREX I too would have revolted. That sounds worse than awful, doesn't it?"

"It does," we all agreed. "But what is it?"

"It's this way," he began. "I don't want any trouble at home with my wife, Janice. You know how touchy she is about some things. Especially about our kid, Bob. Bob has been taking piano lessons. I think it is a waste of money. He hasn't an ear for music. We went out of the house. He was supposed to practice for an hour."

I set up our tape recorder behind the screen. This is Bob at the piano. Awful, terrible, isn't it. Please don't tell Janice!"

We didn't. Actually our only damage consisted of eighteen broken electric lamps which Dave replaced.
